Talking to Your Children about Race and Racism

With Dr. Tyrone Howard

UCLA Professor whose research on race and culture has been recognized nationally

This virtual webinar will identify and discuss strategies, approaches, and resources that adults can use to engage children in learning and talking about race and racism in today's world. Recent events in the nation have revealed that there is a serious need to engage youth in age considerate, developmentally appropriate conversations about race and racism. Participants in this session will be introduced to why race and racism are important topics to discuss with children from ages as young as 3 years old, up to age 18 years of age. Additional resources will be offered for those participants who are looking for supplemental information.
